

February 15, 2022: New Deputy Chiefs Named by Chief of Police

Upon review of the current organizational structure, increase in population, and the complexities involved in operating both a police department and a detention center, a third deputy chief has been added. Now, under Chief Hempelmann's leadership, the BPD will be organized into three bureaus with eight divisions. Traditionally, the department has been organized into two bureaus with seven divisions.

This starts with the promotion of Commander Mark Goodell and Commander Roger Plunkett to serve as the department's newest deputy chiefs following an in-depth promotional process.

"These promotions are well-earned and deserved," Chief Enea Hempelmann said. "For decades, these two leaders have played pivotal roles in supporting the growing and changing department and community of Broomfield. I look forward to working with the deputy chiefs, and the entire department, to continue implementing and enhancing our core values of service, compassion, respect, integrity, pride, professionalism and trust."

Current Deputy Chief Mike Clement will oversee the Special Operations Bureau, which consists of Technical Services, Investigations, and Administrative Services. Deputy Chief Plunkett will be assigned to the Field Operations Bureau that oversees Patrol and Special Services, and Deputy Chief Mark Goodell will oversee the Support Services Bureau, which includes the Broomfield Detention Center and Strategic Services.

The assignments take effect on Wednesday, Feb. 23, and a promotional ceremony will be scheduled in the near future.
