

Construction, Demolition, and Deconstruction Waste Diversion Best Practices and Resources

Construction, Demolition and Deconstruction (“CD&D”) materials make up approximately 25% of the total solid waste generated in the State of Colorado. Unlike peer states considered to be environmental leaders, Colorado does not have state-level policies encouraging CD&D recovery. However, municipalities from the Front Range to our mountain communities are beginning to tackle this issue at the local level. Broomfield’s Zero Waste Plan identified CD&D waste diversion as a priority policy to advance. The first step in Broomfield’s CD&D policy is the sharing of best practices and facilities which provide alternatives for various building materials and common appliances and furniture than the landfill.

Best Practices

Best practices for recycling, salvaging, and reusing CD&D materials focus on reducing waste, conserving resources, and supporting sustainable practices. Here are some strategies:

Source Reduction:

The most effective way to manage CD&D materials is by preventing waste before it’s generated. Techniques include designing buildings with fewer materials, preserving existing structures, using adaptable and disassemblable designs, and optimizing building sizes. Purchasing agreements that minimize excess materials and packaging also help reduce waste.

Deconstruction for Reuse:

Deconstruction involves carefully dismantling buildings to salvage valuable materials for reuse. This approach maximizes material recovery, conserves natural resources, and provides local economic benefits by creating job opportunities. Deconstruction can divert significant amounts of debris from landfills, preserving resources through reuse.

Materials That Can Be Reused:

Many CD&D materials can be salvaged for future use, including:

- Doors, hardware, appliances, and fixtures
- Wood
- Gypsum

- Concrete, brick, and masonry
- Excess insulation
- Paint
- Packaging materials

Recycling CD&D Materials:

Many materials, such as asphalt, concrete, wood, and metals, can be recycled into new products like aggregates, engineered wood products like furniture, mulch, and compost. Researching local recycling options and partnering with certified recyclers ensures that materials are processed and managed correctly, to avoid mismanagement. Facilities that offer alternatives to the landfill are included below.

Rebuying CD&D Materials:

Purchasing used and recycled materials for new construction helps boost the local economy, reduce costs, and preserve architectural character. Rebuying ensures that materials from deconstruction and recycling programs continue to be reused in new projects, contributing to a healthy economy and extending the lifecycle of resources.

By integrating these practices—source reduction, deconstruction, material reuse, recycling, and rebuying: construction projects can reduce environmental impact, support local economies, and promote sustainable construction practices.
